The Molecular Basis of Cancer: A Q&A

Question 1: What is cancer? Answer: Cancer is a disease that occurs when cells in the body begin to grow and divide abnormally. Cancer cells can invade and damage nearby tissues and organs, and they can also spread to other parts of the body, a process known as metastasis.

Question 2: What causes cancer? Answer: Cancer can be caused by a variety of factors, including genetic mutations, exposure to environmental toxins, and infections. Genetic mutations can occur spontaneously or be inherited from parents. Environmental toxins, such as tobacco smoke and asbestos, can damage DNA, leading to mutations that can contribute to cancer development. Certain infections, such as human papillomavirus (HPV) and hepatitis B virus (HBV), can also cause cancer.

Question 3: What are the different types of cancer? Answer: There are many different types of cancer, each named after the organ or tissue in which it originates. Some of the most common types of cancer include lung cancer, breast cancer, prostate cancer, and colon cancer.

Question 4: What is the molecular basis of cancer? Answer: Cancer is a molecular disease, meaning that it is caused by changes in the DNA of cells. These changes can lead to the activation of oncogenes, which are genes that promote cell growth and division, and the inactivation of tumor suppressor genes, which are genes that inhibit cell growth and division.

Question 5: How is cancer treated? Answer: There are a variety of treatment options for cancer, including surgery, chemotherapy, radiation therapy, and targeted therapy. Surgery is used to remove cancerous tumors from the body. Chemotherapy uses drugs to kill cancer cells. Radiation therapy uses high-energy radiation to kill cancer cells. Targeted therapy uses drugs to block the growth and spread of cancer cells.
