Section 20.1 Review: Modern Biology

1. Explain the concept of evolution by natural selection.

Answer: Evolution by natural selection is the theory proposed by Charles Darwin, stating that individuals with traits that make them better suited to their environment are more likely to survive and reproduce. These traits are then passed on to the next generation, leading to the gradual evolution of species over time.

2. What are the four main mechanisms of evolution?

Answer: The four main mechanisms of evolution are mutation, gene flow, genetic drift, and non-random mating. Mutation introduces new genetic variation into the population, gene flow exchanges genes between populations, genetic drift causes random changes in allele frequencies, and non-random mating affects the frequency of certain alleles in the population.

3. How does genetic variation contribute to evolution?

Answer: Genetic variation is the presence of different alleles or gene variants within a population. It is essential for evolution because it provides the raw material upon which natural selection can act. The more genetic variation there is, the more potential there is for individuals to have traits that make them better adapted to their environment.

4. What is the Hardy-Weinberg principle?

Answer: The Hardy-Weinberg principle describes the theoretical equilibrium of allele and genotype frequencies in a population that is not undergoing evolution. It assumes that allele frequencies remain constant from generation to generation, and that there is no selection, mutation, or other evolutionary forces acting on the population.

5. What are some examples of evidence supporting the theory of evolution?

Answer: There are numerous lines of evidence supporting the theory of evolution, including the fossil record, comparative anatomy, embryology, molecular biology, and biogeography. The fossil record shows the progression of species over time, comparative anatomy reveals similarities between different species, embryology demonstrates the shared developmental patterns among organisms, molecular biology uncovers the genetic relatedness of species, and biogeography explains the distribution of species across different regions of the Earth.
