How to Obtain a 737 Type Rating

What is a 737 Type Rating?

A 737 type rating is an authorization granted by an aviation authority that allows a pilot to operate a specific variant of the Boeing 737 aircraft.

How to Get a 737 Type Rating

Obtaining a 737 type rating typically involves the following steps:

1. Prerequisites:

- Hold a commercial pilot license (CPL)
- Meet the minimum flight hour requirements
- Pass a medical examination

2. Training:

- Enroll in an approved 737 type rating course
- Complete the required ground school and simulator training

3. Examination:

- Take and pass a written exam and a flight proficiency check

4. Authorization:

- Obtain the type rating from the relevant aviation authority

How Much Does a 737 Type Rating Cost?

The cost of a 737 type rating can vary depending on the training provider and the variant of the aircraft. Typically, the cost ranges from $20,000 to $35,000.

How Many Hours is a 737 Type Rating?

The training requirement for a 737 type rating typically includes:

- Ground school: 100-150 hours
- Simulator training: 20-35 hours

Will Airlines Pay for Type Rating?

Some airlines may offer to sponsor their pilots for type rating training if they meet specific requirements.

How Many 737 Types Are There?

There are several variants of the Boeing 737, including:

- 737 Original (e.g., 737-200, 737-300)
- 737 Classic (e.g., 737-400, 737-500)
- 737 Next Generation (737NG) (e.g., 737-600, 737-700, 737-800, 737-900)
- 737 Max

Is the Type Rating Hard?

The difficulty of a type rating depends on the individual pilot's abilities and experience. However, the 737 is generally considered a straightforward aircraft to transition to.

Is the 737 Max a Separate Type Rating?

Yes, the 737 Max is a separate type rating due to its significant differences from other 737 variants.
