Topcon Survey Procedure: Setting Up the Total Station

Question 1: What is the first step in setting up a total station? Answer: Mount the total station on a stable tripod and set the legs firmly into the ground. Ensure the tripod is leveled using the built-in bubble level or a separate level indicator.

Question 2: How do you level the total station? Answer: Use the foot screws located at the base of the tripod to adjust the leveling. Rotate the screws until the bubble in the level indicator is centered. Check the leveling from multiple points around the tripod to ensure accuracy.

Question 3: How do you center the total station over a point? Answer: Use a plumb bob or laser pointer to hang a string or beam directly over the survey point. Adjust the tripod head until the vertical laser beam or string intersects the survey point.

Question 4: What is the importance of setting up a backsight station? Answer: A backsight station provides a known reference point for the total station. By sighting to a fixed point, such as a monument or survey marker, the total station can determine its own position and orientation.

Question 5: How do you calibrate the total station? Answer: Refer to the manufacturer's instructions for specific calibration procedures. Generally, this involves sighting to known points and adjusting the reticle or electronic settings to ensure accurate measurements in both horizontal and vertical angles and distances.
