Study Guide: Section 1 - Fossil Evidence of Change Answers

Question 1: What is a fossil? Answer: A fossil is the preserved remains or traces of an ancient organism.

Question 2: Explain the process of fossilization. Answer: Fossilization occurs when an organism's body or parts are buried and replaced by minerals over time. The conditions necessary for fossilization include rapid burial, lack of scavengers, and conditions that favor preservation, such as acidic or alkaline environments.

Question 3: How do fossils provide evidence for evolution? Answer: Fossils show a gradual succession of forms over time. By studying the fossil record, scientists can trace the transformation of one species into another, as well as the emergence of new species. This evidence supports the theory that organisms have evolved from common ancestors.

Question 4: Describe the significance of transitional fossils. Answer: Transitional fossils are fossils that exhibit characteristics of both an ancestral and a descendant species. They provide crucial evidence for the gradual evolution of organisms. For example, the fossil of Archaeopteryx has features of both birds and reptiles, suggesting a transitional form between the two groups.

Question 5: How has the geological timescale aided in understanding the fossil record? Answer: The geological timescale provides a chronological framework for organizing and interpreting the fossil record. By dating fossils and rock layers, scientists can determine the age and sequence of past events and identify the order in which species evolved. This helps them piece together the history of life on Earth.
