Student Exploration: Forest Ecosystem Gizmo Answer Key

Question 1: Describe the initial conditions of the forest ecosystem.

Answer: The forest ecosystem initially consists of 500 trees, 500 rabbits, and 20 foxes.

Question 2: How does the population of rabbits change over time when the forest ecosystem is in equilibrium?

Answer: The population of rabbits oscillates around an equilibrium of 500 individuals. The population peaks in the spring and decreases in the winter due to competition for resources and predation by foxes.

Question 3: What happens to the tree population when the rabbit population decreases significantly?

Answer: The tree population increases when the rabbit population decreases. This is because rabbits eat tree saplings, so when there are fewer rabbits, there are more saplings that can grow into mature trees.

Question 4: How does a drought affect the forest ecosystem?

Answer: A drought reduces the availability of water and vegetation, which limits the carrying capacity of the ecosystem. This causes the populations of trees, rabbits, and foxes to decrease.

Question 5: What are the implications of human activities on the forest ecosystem?

Answer: Human activities, such as logging and pollution, can disrupt the equilibrium of the forest ecosystem. Logging can reduce the tree population, which in turn can affect the rabbit and fox populations. Pollution can also harm trees and animals, reducing their overall health and productivity.
