Sneaker Wars: The Enemy Brothers Who Founded Adidas and Puma

In the annals of business history, few family feuds have had as profound an impact as the one between the Dassler brothers, Adolf and Rudolf. Their rivalry gave birth to two of the world's most iconic sportswear brands: Adidas and Puma.

The Early Years

The Dassler brothers, born in 1892 and 1898 respectively, grew up in the Bavarian town of Herzogenaurach, Germany. From an early age, they shared a love for sports and shoemaking. In 1920, they founded the Gebrüder Dassler Schuhfabrik (Dassler Brothers Shoe Factory).

The Rift

During World War II, the brothers' relationship began to deteriorate. Adolf, who joined the Nazi Party, accused Rudolf of being a traitor. Rudolf, in turn, accused Adolf of exploiting his connections with the Nazis. In 1947, the brothers formally divided their company, with Adolf taking Adidas and Rudolf founding Puma.

Bitter Competition

The split between the brothers created an intense rivalry between Adidas and Puma. They competed fiercely for market share, sponsoring athletes and using every means possible to outdo each other. The town of Herzogenaurach became known as the "Sneaker City," with each brother's factory on opposite sides of the town's river.

The Legacy

The Dassler brothers' feud had a profound impact on the business of sport. The animosity between them spurred innovation, leading to the development of new shoe technologies and marketing strategies. Today, Adidas and Puma remain two of the world's leading sportswear brands, a testament to the legacy of their bitter rivalry.
