6 Million Lost Voters: The Sentencing Project

The Sentencing Project is a non-profit organization that conducts research and advocacy on criminal justice issues. One of its key findings is that there are over 6 million people in the United States who have lost their voting rights due to felony convictions. This number represents a staggering 2.5% of the voting-age population.

Why have these individuals lost their voting rights?

In most states, individuals convicted of felonies lose their voting rights. This disenfranchisement is a holdover from the Jim Crow era, when Southern states used felony disenfranchisement laws to prevent African Americans from voting. Today, felony disenfranchisement laws continue to disproportionately impact communities of color.

What are the consequences of felony disenfranchisement?

Felony disenfranchisement has a number of negative consequences for individuals and communities. It can lead to:

- Reduced civic participation
- Lowered employment opportunities
- Increased recidivism

What can be done to restore voting rights to people with felony convictions?

There are a number of steps that can be taken to restore voting rights to people with felony convictions. These include:

- Passing legislation to automatically restore voting rights to people with felony convictions
- Expanding early voting and same-day registration
- Making it easier for people with felony convictions to register to vote

What is the Sentencing Project doing to address felony disenfranchisement?

The Sentencing Project is working to address felony disenfranchisement through research, advocacy, and public education. The organization has partnered with a number of other organizations to form the Restore Your Vote coalition, which is working to restore voting rights to people with felony convictions in all 50 states.
