Transport Processes and Separation Process Principles, 4th Edition: Questions and Answers

Question 1: Explain the concept of molecular diffusion.

Answer: Molecular diffusion is the net movement of molecules from a region of high concentration to a region of low concentration. This occurs due to the random motion of molecules, and the rate of diffusion is proportional to the concentration gradient and the diffusion coefficient.

Question 2: How is the diffusion coefficient affected by temperature and molecular size?

Answer: The diffusion coefficient increases with increasing temperature and decreases with increasing molecular size. This is because temperature increases the kinetic energy of molecules, making them move faster, and larger molecules have more mass and thus move more slowly.

Question 3: Describe the process of convective heat transfer.

Answer: Convective heat transfer occurs when heat is transferred through the bulk motion of a fluid. This can occur by forced convection (where fluid is moved by an external force) or natural convection (where fluid moves due to buoyancy forces caused by temperature differences).

Question 4: Explain the principle behind distillation.

Answer: Distillation is a separation process based on the different boiling points of components in a mixture. The mixture is heated to vaporize the component with the lower boiling point, which is then condensed into a separate vessel. This process can be repeated to further purify the components.

Question 5: Describe the use of membranes in separation processes.

Answer: Membranes are semi-permeable barriers that allow certain molecules to pass through while blocking others. They are used in processes such as microfiltration, ultrafiltration, and reverse osmosis to separate components based on their size, charge, or other properties.
