

Biochar for environmental management science technology and implementation

Download Complete File

What is the sustainable use of biochar in environmental management? In addition to this, biochar sequestration, in combination with sustainable biomass production, can be carbon-negative and therefore used to actively remove carbon dioxide from the atmosphere, with potentially major implications for mitigation of climate change.

What are the disadvantages of biochar production? Crop yield may decline due to sorption of water and nutrients by the biochar. Reduced efficacy of pesticides due to sorption by the biochar. Some biochars are a source of contaminants like heavy metals etc.

What are the risks of biochar? Biochar has various potential environmental risks in soil, water, and atmosphere. Feedstocks, production process, and application affect the ecotoxicity of biochar. The harmful components in biochar have potential environmental risks. The size and structure of biochar itself have potential environmental risks.
