Section 10.4: Evidence of Evolution Answer Key

Section 10.4: This section discusses various lines of evidence that support the theory of evolution by natural selection. This includes:

1. Comparative Anatomy and Embryology: Homologous structures in different organisms suggest common ancestry. For example, the forelimbs of humans, bats, and whales show similar bone structures despite serving different functions.
2. Fossil Record: Fossils provide evidence of past life on Earth and show how organisms have changed over time. Transitional fossils, like Archaeopteryx, demonstrate intermediate forms between different groups of organisms.
3. Molecular Evidence: DNA and protein sequences can be compared to infer evolutionary relationships between species. The greater the similarity in genetic material, the closer the relatedness of organisms.
4. Biogeography: The distribution of species around the world provides clues to their evolutionary history. For example, marsupials are found only in Australia and nearby islands, suggesting that they evolved there and did not disperse to other continents.

5. Direct Observation: Scientists have directly observed evolution in action in short-lived organisms or in controlled experiments. For example, the peppered moth population in England changed color from light to dark over time in response to industrial pollution.

Answer Key:

1. Evidence for common ancestry from comparative anatomy includes:

- Homologous structures
- Vestigial structures
- Analogous structures

2. The fossil record provides evidence for:

- Changes in life forms over time
- Transitional forms
- Extinction and speciation

3. Molecular evidence for evolution includes:

- Similarity in DNA and protein sequences
- Genetic relatedness
- Molecular clocks

4. Biogeographic evidence for evolution includes:

- Endemic species
- Dispersal patterns
- Geographic barriers

5. Direct observation of evolution includes:

- Changes in populations over time
- Experiments demonstrating natural selection

What is ISO 31000 risk management? According to ISO 31000, risk management process is a "systematic application of management policies, procedures and practices to the tasks of communication, consultation, establishing the context, identifying, analysing, evaluating, treating, monitoring and reviewing risk".

The 4 Pillars of risk Management is an approach to the planning and delivery of risk management developed by Professor Hazel Kemshall at De Montfort University. The model is based on the four pillars of Supervision, Monitoring & Control, Interventions and Treatment and Victim Safety Planning.

How does ISO 31000 define risk? ISO 31000 creates a new definition of risk as "the effect of uncertainty on objectives, whether positive or negative." This definition shifts the understanding of risk away from the possibility of a negative outcome and toward the uncertainty itself.

Can ISO 31000 be certified? ISO 31000 is not a certifiable standard. It's a set of guidelines providing guidance for enterprises in risk management.

How long does it take to implement ISO 31000? The time it takes to implement ISO 31000 can vary depending on an organisation's size, complexity, and risk management maturity level. This can range from around 6 to 12 days.

What is COSO and ISO 31000? COSO combines its framework, principles and process into a single structure that incorporates risk management into a broader set of organizational governance and management practices. ISO 31000 distinguishes between those three elements and more directly details the required risk management tasks.

What is the first phase of ISO 31000? Stage one: Establishing the context After setting the objectives and scope, the organization should spell out the factors affecting the assessment. This should include external factors such as the legal and regulatory environment, political considerations, economic circumstances and the views of external stakeholders.

How to write a risk statement? The recently published DoD RIO Guide indicates a good risk statement will include two or, potentially, three elements: the potential event or condition, the consequences and, if known, the cause of the event. The potential event is a future possible happening that could have an impact on the program objectives.

What documents are required for ISO 31000? The documents to be opened to the certification body will include the Corporate Risk Management Handbook, the company's organizational chart, risk management business processes, updated job descriptions, risk management application instructions and similar documents.
