Surgical Technique of the Abdominal Organ Procurement

Step-by-Step Guide from Andrzej Baranski (November 2008)

1. Q: What are the initial steps in abdominal organ procurement?

A: The procedure begins with laparotomy through a midline incision. The abdominal cavity is explored to assess the anatomical variations and establish the location of the organs to be harvested. The abdominal aorta, inferior vena cava, and the organs to be procured are then identified and mobilized.

2. Q: How is the liver removed?

A: The liver is first mobilized from its attachments to the diaphragm and the inferior vena cava. The hepatic veins are then dissected and ligated, and the liver is transected along the right and left hepatic veins, leaving a cuff of liver tissue around the vena cava.

3. Q: What is the technique for harvesting the pancreas?

A: The pancreas is initially mobilized from the duodenum. The splenic vein is identified and ligated at its confluence with the superior mesenteric vein. The pancreas is then separated from the stomach and the portal vein. The superior mesenteric artery is then dissected and ligated, and the pancreas is transected distal to the ligature.

4. Q: How are the kidneys harvested?

A: The kidneys are first mobilized from the surrounding tissues. The renal veins are identified and ligated, and the renal arteries are then dissected and ligated. The kidneys are then excised from the retroperitoneal space.

5. Q: What are the final steps of the procedure?

A: After all the organs have been harvested, the abdominal cavity is irrigated and drained. The incision is closed in layers, and the surgical site is dressed. The organs are then prepared for transport and transplantation.
