2. How does the protagonist experience "too much happiness"?

Sonia Laidlaw, the protagonist, is initially overwhelmed by an intense and overwhelming joy following her pregnancy and the birth of her daughter. However, this happiness gradually transforms into a burden that weighs heavily upon her. She experiences moments of intense elation, followed by periods of deep despair and emotional exhaustion.

3. What are the consequences of "too much happiness" for Sonia?

The excessive happiness Sonia experiences has a profound impact on her relationships, health, and overall well-being. She becomes increasingly isolated, struggles with insomnia, and experiences a decline in her physical health. The weight of her happiness becomes unbearable, and she desperately seeks relief from its overwhelming presence.

4. How does the story explore the duality of happiness?

Munro deftly portrays the duality of happiness through Sonia's journey. While initial moments of exhilaration are present, they are eventually eclipsed by an undercurrent of unease. The story implies that lasting contentment may not be found in excessive joy but rather in a harmonious blending of both positive and negative experiences.
