What is Trauma-Focused Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (TF-CBT)?

TF-CBT is a specialized type of therapy designed to help individuals who have experienced traumatic events. TF-CBT aims to help individuals process their traumatic memories, change negative thoughts and beliefs, and develop coping strategies.

How Does TF-CBT Work?

TF-CBT involves a structured approach that typically lasts 8-16 sessions. It begins by establishing safety and trust between the therapist and client. What are the Benefits of TF-CBT?

Research has shown that TF-CBT is an effective treatment for trauma-related symptoms. It can help to reduce symptoms such as anxiety, depression, anger, and flashbacks. It can also improve coping mechanisms, increase self-esteem, and promote recovery from traumatic experiences.

Who Benefits from TF-CBT?

TF-CBT is appropriate for individuals who have experienced a wide range of traumatic events, including childhood abuse, sexual assault, accidents, or combat exposure. It is particularly effective for children and adolescents who have experienced trauma.

How Do I Find a TF-CBT Therapist?

Many mental health professionals, including psychologists, counselors, and social workers, provide TF-CBT. It is important to find a therapist who is certified in TF-CBT and has experience working with individuals who have experienced trauma. You can ask for referrals from your doctor or mental health professional, or search for certified therapists in your area online.
