The Crisis of Islam: Holy War and Unholy Terror by Bernard Lewis

Q: What is the main thesis of Lewis' book? A: Lewis argues that Islam is facing a crisis of identity, torn between its traditional doctrines of holy war and the modern realities of terrorism.

Q: How does Lewis define "holy war"? A: Lewis defines holy war as a religious obligation incumbent on all Muslims to fight for the defense and expansion of Islam. He contends that this concept is deeply rooted in Islamic tradition and has influenced Muslim history and politics for centuries.

Q: What is Lewis' view on contemporary terrorism? A: Lewis sees contemporary terrorism as a manifestation of a radical form of Islam that seeks to impose a strict Islamic regime on the world. He argues that this form of terrorism is not simply a political or economic phenomenon but is also driven by religious ideology.

Q: What are the implications of the crisis of Islam for the West? A: Lewis believes that the crisis of Islam poses serious challenges to Western societies, which are home to large Muslim populations. He argues that the West must understand the religious and ideological roots of terrorism to effectively combat it.

Q: What does Lewis suggest as a solution to the crisis of Islam? A: Lewis calls for a reformed Islam that rejects the doctrines of holy war and terrorism. He believes that Muslim leaders must reinterpret Islamic teachings in a way that is compatible with modern values of peace and tolerance.
