Can seeds be sown in the desert? By seeding a wide variety of species in the desert, nature will select those plants best suited for a particular location. These plants will flourish, drawing water from deep within the earth and thereby allowing other plants and trees to prosper.

How do you germinate desert seeds?

Why can't plants grow in the desert? There is not much water available in the desert. This means that plants have to get most of their moisture from the air. They do this by opening their stomata, tiny pores in their leaves, during the night when it is cooler and there is more humidity in the air.
