Steam Project: Tiny Dancers – A Homopolar Motor

What is a homopolar motor?

A homopolar motor is a simple electric motor that produces continuous rotation using a single polarity of current. It consists of a magnet, a conducting disc, and a power source. When current flows through the disc, it creates a magnetic field that interacts with the magnet's field, causing the disc to rotate.

How does the Steam Project Tiny Dancers motor work?

The Steam Project Tiny Dancers motor is a small, fun homopolar motor that uses a steam turbine to drive the disc. The turbine is made of a thin sheet of aluminum that is cut into a spiral shape. When steam is blown through the turbine, it spins, transferring motion to the disc. The disc is made of copper and has a small magnet attached to it. When the disc spins, it creates a magnetic field that interacts with the magnet's field, causing the disc to rotate even faster.

What are the materials you need to build the Tiny Dancers motor?

4. Bend the copper wire into a U-shape and insert the magnet into the bend.
5. Cut a small piece of cardboard and punch a hole in the center.
6. Insert the copper wire into the hole and secure it with hot glue.
7. Connect the copper wire to the 9-volt battery.
8. Blow steam through the turbine and watch the disc spin!

What are some tips for building the Tiny Dancers motor?

Here are some tips for building the Tiny Dancers motor:

- Make sure that the spiral shape is cut accurately.
- Roll the cone tightly so that the turbine spins smoothly.
- Secure the magnet to the copper wire firmly.
- Make sure that the cardboard is thick enough to support the motor.
- Connect the copper wire to the battery securely.
- Blow steam through the turbine gently so that the disc does not spin too fast.
