Section 2: Wave Properties Study Guide

Question: Define a wave and its key components.

Answer: A wave is a disturbance that travels through a medium. It consists of alternating crests and troughs, which represent the regions of maximum and minimum displacement from the equilibrium position, respectively. The distance between two consecutive crests (or troughs) is called the wavelength, while the number of waves passing through a given point in one second is called the frequency.

Question: Explain the difference between longitudinal and transverse waves.

Answer: Longitudinal waves are characterized by particles of the medium vibrating parallel to the direction of wave propagation. For example, sound waves in air are longitudinal. Transverse waves, on the other hand, have particles vibrating perpendicular to the direction of propagation. Examples of transverse waves include electromagnetic waves (e.g., light) and water waves.

Question: Describe the relationship between wave speed, wavelength, and frequency.

Answer: The wave speed ( $v$ ) is directly proportional to both the wavelength ( $\lambda$ ) and the frequency ( $f$ ). The equation is given by  $v = \lambda f$ . This means that faster waves have either shorter wavelengths or higher frequencies.

Question: Explain the concept of wave interference and its different types.

Answer: Wave interference occurs when two or more waves combine at a single point. Constructive interference occurs when the waves reinforce each other, resulting in a higher amplitude. Destructive interference occurs when the waves cancel each other out, resulting in a lower amplitude. Interference can also lead to standing waves, which are waves that appear stationary due to the superposition of waves traveling in opposite directions.

Question: Discuss the effects of reflection, transmission, and absorption on waves.

Answer: When a wave encounters a boundary between two different media, it can undergo reflection, transmission, and absorption. Reflection is the bouncing back of the wave from the boundary. Transmission is the continuation of the wave into the second medium. Absorption is the conversion of wave energy into other forms, such as heat or sound. The amount of reflection, transmission, and absorption depends on the properties of the incident wave and the boundary.
