Why does Lee send Mr. Grey a worm? He stops playing the games for a time, but Lee provokes him ever more strongly by “misbehaving,” finally resorting to giving him an earthworm in an envelope. It's too much for Mr. Grey—he masturbates onto her naked buttocks instead of spanking her, but he still can't admit to his sexual and emotional need for her.

What does the ending of secretary mean? In voice over at the end of the movie, Lee tells the audience again and again that she's just fine, she's happy; she has a marriage that allows her to express her submissive self. Still, Lee and Grey's relationship is too pat, too neatly packaged for us at the end, instead of realistically messy and indeterminate.

Is Lee autistic in Secretary? For this article, I am going to be discussing a film where the main character, Lee Holloway, is not canonically Autistic but throughout the film displays Autistic traits.

What was the significance of the worm in The Secretary? It has also been suggested that a worm could be symbolic of a limp male member and could therefore be construed as an attack on his manhood, but if so the end result would be the same (namely, provoking him).

What do the red pens mean in Secretary? Mr. Grey is an overbearing perfectionist, showing his control over his secretary with a red pen for highlighting grammatical errors in her typing. Lee responds to it with her sewing kit, full of the means necessary to inflict pain upon herself.
