Total Institutions: Insights from Erving Goffman

What are Total Institutions?

Total institutions are social settings where individuals are subject to strict rules and supervision. They include prisons, mental hospitals, military bases, and boarding schools. In such institutions, everyday life is highly controlled and individuals' identities and autonomy are often challenged.

Erving Goffman's Study

Sociologist Erving Goffman coined the term "total institution" in his seminal work, "Asylums: Essays on the Social Situation of Mental Patients and Other Inmates." Through observations and interviews, Goffman explored the profound impact of total institutions on individuals' identities and social interactions.

Characteristics of Total Institutions

According to Goffman, total institutions are characterized by:

- Isolation from the outside world: Individuals are often cut off from friends, family, and society.
- Regulated daily routines: Activities are strictly scheduled and monitored, leaving little room for individual choice.
- Depersonalization: Individuals are assigned numbers or uniforms, diminishing their sense of self.
- Strict hierarchy: Power is concentrated in the hands of authority figures, creating a clear divide between staff and inmates.

Impact on Individuals
