Q2: Explain the different types of research designs.

A: Sekaran classifies research designs into three main types:

- Exploratory: Unstructured and flexible, used to gather preliminary information and generate research questions.
- Descriptive: Describes the characteristics of a population or phenomenon, often using observational methods.
- Causal: Examines cause-and-effect relationships, employing experimental or quasi-experimental designs.

Q3: What are the factors to consider when selecting a research design?

A: Sekaran emphasizes several factors, including:

- Research objectives: The purpose of the study influences the appropriate design.
- Data availability: The availability of relevant data affects the feasibility of different designs.

Sampling techniques include probability sampling (e.g., simple random sampling) and non-probability sampling (e.g., convenience sampling).

Q5: How can researchers ensure the validity and reliability of their research findings?

A: Sekaran discusses several strategies to enhance research validity and reliability:

- Using appropriate research designs: Well-designed studies reduce bias and increase the accuracy of findings.
- Employing rigorous data collection methods: Standardized instruments and unbiased procedures ensure data quality.
