Women and Long-Term Care: Essential Questions Answered by AARP

As the population ages, the need for long-term care is growing. For women, the need is particularly acute, as they live longer than men and are more likely to experience chronic health conditions. That's why it's vital for women to understand their options and plan for the future.

What is long-term care?

Long-term care is a range of services and support that helps people with chronic health conditions live independently and safely. It can include assistance with activities of daily living (such as bathing, dressing, and eating), nursing care, rehabilitation, and social services.

Why is it important for women to plan for long-term care?

Women are more likely to need long-term care than men. According to AARP, women make up more than two-thirds of all nursing home residents. They also spend more time in nursing homes than men, and they incur higher costs for long-term care.

What are the costs of long-term care?

The costs of long-term care can vary widely depending on the type of care needed and the location of the care. According to AARP, the average monthly cost of a nursing home stay is over $8,000. The average monthly cost of home health care is over $4,000.

How can I plan for long-term care?

There are a number of steps women can take to plan for long-term care. AARP recommends the following:

- Talk to your family. Let your family know your wishes for long-term care and discuss who would be willing to help care for you if you need it.
- Consider long-term care insurance. This type of insurance can help cover the costs of long-term care.
- Make financial plans. Save money for long-term care or invest in a long-term care annuity.
- Get legal help. A lawyer can help you create a will, a trust, and other legal documents that will protect your assets and ensure that your wishes are carried out.
