Shop Girl: A Q&A with Steve Martin

Q: What drew you to the role of Ray Porter?

A: Ray is a character who has a lot of depth and vulnerability. He's a man who's stuck in a rut, but he's also capable of great compassion and love. I was intrigued by the challenge of playing someone who is both flawed and sympathetic.

Q: How did you prepare for the role?

A: I spent a lot of time talking to people who work in retail. I wanted to get a sense of their daily lives and the challenges they face. I also watched a lot of documentaries about the retail industry.

Q: What do you think is the most important theme of Shop Girl?

A: I think the most important theme is the idea of second chances. Ray is a man who has made some mistakes in his life, but he's given a chance to redeem himself. The film shows that it's never too late to change your life.

Q: What was it like working with Claire Danes and Jason Schwartzman?

A: It was a pleasure to work with Claire and Jason. They're both incredibly talented actors, and they brought their A-game to the set every day. We had a lot of fun working together, and I think it shows in the film.

Q: What do you hope audiences will take away from Shop Girl?

A: I hope audiences will be entertained by the film, but I also hope they'll be inspired by Ray's story. I think it's a film that can give people hope that no matter what mistakes they've made, they can always turn their lives around.
