Did Aron Ralston like 127 Hours? Of the authenticity of 127 Hours, Ralston has said that the film is "so factually accurate it is as close to a documentary as you can get and still be a drama," and he jokingly added that he thought it is "the best film ever made."

How much did the boulder weigh in 127 Hours? He continues through a slot canyon in Bluejohn Canyon. While climbing, an 800-pound (360 kg) boulder he is hanging off comes loose and causes both to fall, which traps his right arm against the wall. Aron attempts to move the boulder, but it does not budge; he also soon realizes he is alone.

Was 127 Hours filmed in the exact spot? The authenticity of 127 Hours is bolstered by its filming locations, primarily shot in the actual Bluejohn Canyon in Utah, where Ralston's grueling experience unfolded. The stunning, expansive landscapes of the Canyonlands National Park serve as a striking backdrop and a stark reminder of Ralston's isolation.
