The Bible and the Future: Anthony A. Hoekema's Insights

In his book "The Bible and the Future," theologian Anthony A. Hoekema tackles fundamental questions about the role of the Bible in understanding eschatology, the study of future events. Here are some key questions and answers from Hoekema's work:

1. What is the nature of biblical prophecy?

Hoekema argues that biblical prophecy is not a mere prediction of events but rather a divine revelation that shapes history and people's lives. It involves both prediction and prescription, offering insights into the future while also providing guidance for present-day living.

2. How should we interpret biblical prophecies about the end times?

Hoekema distinguishes between two main approaches to interpreting eschatological passages: literalism and symbolism. While literalists insist on a straightforward, word-for-word interpretation, Hoekema advocates for a more nuanced approach that considers the symbolic nature of many prophecies, especially those in the book of Revelation.

3. What is the purpose of eschatology?

According to Hoekema, eschatology has two main purposes: comfort and motivation. It provides comfort by assuring believers of their future hope and the ultimate triumph of good over evil. It also serves as a source of motivation by encouraging faith, obedience, and perseverance in the face of present challenges.

4. What does the Bible say about the intermediate state between death and resurrection?

Hoekema argues that the Bible teaches a conscious existence for the soul after death. He distinguishes between the intermediate state of believers, who experience joy and communion with Christ, and the intermediate state of unbelievers, who experience conscious suffering and torment.

5. What is the ultimate hope of the Christian?

Hoekema concludes by affirming the Christian hope of the resurrection of the body and the establishment of the new heaven and new earth. He emphasizes that this hope is not a mere fantasy but a real event towards which Christians are called to live in faith and anticipation.
