You and the Refugee: The Morals and Economics of the Problem

By Norman Angell and Dorothy Frances Buxton

Introduction

The refugee crisis is a global humanitarian issue that affects millions of people worldwide. In their book, "You and the Refugee," Norman Angell and Dorothy Frances Buxton explore the moral and economic dimensions of the problem and offer thought-provoking insights.

Moral Obligations

Are we morally obligated to help refugees? Angell and Buxton argue that the answer is a resounding yes. They emphasize that refugees are individuals who have been forced to flee their homes due to war, persecution, or other threats to their lives and well-being. Providing them with assistance is a matter of basic human decency.

Economic Implications

What are the economic costs and benefits of helping refugees? Angell and Buxton maintain that welcoming refugees can actually boost the economy. Refugees often bring valuable skills and experience that can contribute to the local workforce. In addition, their spending on goods and services stimulates economic activity.

Shared Responsibility

Who should bear the responsibility of assisting refugees? Angell and Buxton assert that it is a shared responsibility among governments, organizations, and individuals. While governments have a primary role to play, they cannot address the crisis alone. Individuals and organizations can also make a difference by providing financial support, volunteering their time, or simply raising awareness about the issue.

Long-Term Solutions

What are sustainable long-term solutions to the refugee crisis? Angell and Buxton argue that addressing the root causes of displacement, such as war and poverty, is essential. This requires international cooperation and diplomacy. Additionally, it is crucial to promote integration and social cohesion by providing refugees with access to education, healthcare, and other essential services.

Conclusion

Angell and Buxton's book is a thoughtful and compassionate examination of the multifaceted challenges posed by the refugee crisis. They urge us to recognize both our moral obligations and economic self-interest in helping refugees. By working together, we can create a more just and humane world for all.
