What happens in chapter 7 of Purple Hibiscus? Papa tries to control his children from afar via their schedules, but he also weeps when they leave—they are the center of his life too, even though he mistreats them. Jaja and Kambili leave Papa for the first time, and are about to experience a new kind of freedom and independence.

What happens in chapter 4 of Purple Hibiscus? There is a two-week break from school, and on the last weekend Mama takes Jaja and Kambili to get new sandals and bags. Kambili notices the crowds of the poor at the market, and then sees a group of soldiers around a woman who is tearing her hair and crying in the dirt. Mama tries to shield the children from seeing.

What happened in chapter 2 of Purple Hibiscus? Mama tells Kambili that she is pregnant, and the baby is due in October. Mama is pleased with this, because after having Kambili she had several miscarriages. The people of their home village started to gossip, and even to suggest that Papa should marry another woman who could have more children.

What happens in Chapter 5 Purple Hibiscus? Papa tells Jaja and Kambili that they will visit Papa-Nnukwu today, but only for fifteen minutes, and not to eat or drink anything there. Jaja and Kambili have only been allowed to visit their grandfather since he called a meeting of the umunna (large extended family) to complain that he never saw his grandchildren.

What happened in chapter 10 Purple Hibiscus? Auntie Ifeoma again tries to draw Kambili out of her shell—when Amaka is rude to Kambili, Ifeoma rebukes Kambili for her silence more than Amaka for her rudeness. And this succeeds, as Kambili finally finds her voice and is able to speak without stuttering or whispering.

What is Chapter 9 of Purple Hibiscus about? Auntie Ifeoma praises the virtues of being defiant and resisting the British, hinting that this is what Jaja must do with Papa. By now Ifeoma knows that Papa has a tyrannical hold over his children, and so she starts to try and teach them to be independent. Jaja is a more willing student than Kambili.

What happens in chapter 6 of Purple Hibiscus? Ifeoma says that her children are visiting Papa-Nnukwu and listening to his stories. Mama comes in and brings Ifeoma some food and drinks. Ifeoma calls Mama nwunye m, which means “my wife,” to show that she accepts her as the wife of the family—but it is part of an “ungodly tradition” according to Papa.

What happens in chapter 3 of Purple Hibiscus? Father Benedict asks about Mama's health, but she blames her sickly appearance on allergies. After the visit Papa grits his teeth on the drive home as they listen to "Ave Maria." When they get home Mama offers to pour Papa's tea, but he refuses. He gives Jaja and Kambili their "love sips" of the tea.

What happened in chapter 11 of Purple Hibiscus? One rainy day Ade Coker is assassinated in his home. He receives a package from the Head of State, and when he opens it at the breakfast table with his family he is blown up. Kambili and Jaja come home that day to find Papa sobbing on the sofa, looking small and broken. Mama and Jaja comfort him.

What happens in Chapter 15 Purple Hibiscus? Father Amadi visits on his last day in Nigeria. Obiora comments about the missionaries now coming from "darkest Africa" to reconvert Europe. Father Amadi asks Kambili to spend a last hour with him, but she refuses, suddenly angry that he is leaving.

What is the symbolism in Chapter 1 of Purple Hibiscus? Adichie briefly introduces the purple hibiscus as a symbol of freedom and independence, while also referencing the theme of silence and speech and bringing up Nigerian politics.

What happens in the last chapter of Purple Hibiscus? Many tragedies have occurred, but the novel closes at a time of tentative hope for both the Achikes and Nigeria. The corrupt Head of State has died, and so there is a chance for a renewed democracy, and now Jaja is about to be released, so the family will be reunited at last after three years.

What happens in Purple Hibiscus Chapter 14? On Good Friday Papa seems sicker, and he spills his tea because his hands are shaking. He decides to go to the evening Mass instead of the usual morning one. Kambili remembers one Good Friday when she kissed the cross and wept, and how Papa was so pleased by her tears. Auntie Ifeoma calls, interrupting her memories.

Why does mama have a miscarriage in Purple Hibiscus? Kambili's mother, a quiet, submissive woman who takes care of her children but does not speak out against Papa's violence. After Kambili's birth she suffers several miscarriages because of Papa's beatings.

Does Jaja go to jail in Purple Hibiscus? Answer and Explanation: Jaja's mother, in Purple Hibiscus by Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie, poisons her husband as a way to escape the abuse he was dishing out on his family. In an attempt to protect his mother, Jaja takes the blame for her actions and subsequently is taken to jail for three years.

Why was Ade Coker killed? As a result of an article about the execution in the Standard, Ade Coker is taken by the military and tortured. Ade is later killed for further criticism of the government. When Kambili and Jaja visit Auntie Ifeoma, they learn that there is more political tension in Nsukka.

Why does Papa abuse in Purple Hibiscus? Purple Hibiscus, a novel by Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie, tells the story of a family in Nigeria who are devout Catholics. Yet the father abuses his family. He uses their religious beliefs as reasons to do so and finds justification for his abuse in his religion.

What age is appropriate for Purple Hibiscus? If you want them to read the book on their own under the age of 16, I would probably say not to. However, if you want to use it as a reference and pull pieces out and summarize the storyline, I think it could be appropriate for any age.

What happened to Jaja's finger? At ten, Jaja's finger was broken by his father because he missed two questions on his catechism test and thus did not emerge as the best candidate. The broken finger is described as a “gnarled finger deformed like a dried stick” (153).

How did Mama poison Papa in Purple Hibiscus? The phone rings and Mama answers it. When she hangs up she says that they did an autopsy and found poison in Papa's body. Then she calmly says that she had been putting poison in his tea since before she came to Nsukka. Sisi helped her get the poison.

Why does papa cry in Purple Hibiscus? In the tears he sheds following his violent retributions for their perceived wrongdoings, he reveals that he himself feels punished for his own failures to keep his family holy.

Who killed Papa Eugene in Purple Hibiscus? As the narrative comes to a closure, Papa Eugene is dead. He has been poisoned by his wife, with the assistance of Sisi, their house help. Jaja claims the responsibility for poisoning his father and goes to prison. The public blames the government for his death, given his critical newspaper.

Why does mama have a miscarriage in Purple Hibiscus? Kambili's mother, a quiet, submissive woman who takes care of her children but does not speak out against Papa's violence. After Kambili's birth she suffers several miscarriages because of Papa's beatings.

Transmission and Distribution for Diploma Engineering

1. What is the purpose of transmission systems in electrical power engineering?

Transmission systems are designed to transport electrical power over long distances from generating plants to load centers. They operate at high voltages to minimize energy losses due to resistance in the conductors.

2. What are the components of a transmission system?

Transmission systems typically consist of transmission lines, transformers, substations, and protective devices. Transmission lines carry the electrical power, while transformers adjust the voltage levels to facilitate long-distance transmission and distribution.

3. What is the role of distribution systems in electrical power engineering?

Distribution systems are responsible for delivering electrical power to consumers. They connect substations to homes, businesses, and industries. Distribution systems operate at lower voltages compared to transmission systems.

4. What are the challenges in transmission and distribution of electrical power?

Challenges in transmission and distribution include minimizing energy losses, maintaining voltage stability, and ensuring system reliability. Efficient conductors, advanced control systems, and automation are employed to address these challenges.

5. What are the safety considerations in transmission and distribution systems?

Electrical power transmission and distribution systems pose safety hazards due to high voltages and currents. Proper grounding, insulation, and protective devices are essential to prevent electrical shocks and accidents.
