The Case for God: Questions and Answers with Karen Armstrong

What is the main argument of "The Case for God"?

In her book, Karen Armstrong argues that religion is not a relic of the past but an essential part of the human experience. She believes that religion provides us with a sense of meaning and purpose, as well as a framework for ethical behavior. She also argues that religion can be a source of hope and comfort in times of need.

What are some of the challenges to the case for God?

One of the main challenges to the case for God is the problem of evil. If God is good and all-powerful, why does he allow suffering to exist? This is a question that has been asked by philosophers and theologians for centuries, and there is no easy answer.

Another challenge to the case for God is the problem of diversity. There are many different religions in the world, and each one claims to be the true path to God. How can we know which religion is right?

How does Armstrong respond to these challenges?

Armstrong responds to the problem of evil by arguing that God is not responsible for all suffering. She believes that much of the suffering in the world is caused by human beings themselves. She also argues that God is a God of love, and that he is always with us even in our darkest moments.

Armstrong responds to the problem of diversity by arguing that there is no one true religion. She believes that all religions are expressions of the same universal truth. She also argues that we should be tolerant of other religions and learn from their different perspectives.

What is Armstrong's ultimate conclusion?

Armstrong's ultimate conclusion is that God is real and that religion is essential to the human experience. She believes that we need God to give us meaning and purpose, to guide our ethical behavior, and to comfort us in times of need.

Why is Armstrong's work important?

Armstrong's work is important because it provides a thoughtful and compassionate defense of religion at a time when it is often under attack. Her work helps us to understand the importance of religion in the human experience and to see how it can be a source of good in the world.
