Dysarthria: Assessments and Diagnosis

Dysarthria is a neurogenic speech disorder characterized by impaired articulation and prosody due to neuromuscular dysfunction. Various assessments are used to evaluate dysarthria and assess its severity.

Assessments Used for Dysarthria:

- Physiological Assessment: Examines the functioning of the speech mechanism, including muscles, breathing, and voicing.
- Intelligibility Assessment: Measures the clarity and understandability of speech.
- DIP Assessment (Dyspraxia of Intelligibility and Prosody): Assesses speech intelligibility and prosody in individuals with apraxia of speech and dysarthria.

Gold Standard for Dysarthria Assessment:

The Consensus of the Assessment Procedures for Speech Disorders in Adults Third Edition (CAPSD-3) is considered the gold standard for dysarthria assessment.

Example of Dysarthria:

Spastic dysarthria occurs due to upper motor neuron damage and is characterized by slow, effortful speech, hypernasality, and imprecise consonant production.

Symptoms of Spastic Dysarthria:

- Slow and laborious speech
- Exploding speech (sudden bursts of air)
- Monotonous pitch and loudness
- Difficulty with consonant production
- Hypernasality

How to Diagnose Dysarthria:

1. Medical history and physical examination
2. Speech and language examination
3. Assessment of physiological functions and intelligibility

Dysarthria vs. Aphasia:

Dysarthria affects speech production due to neuromuscular impairments, while aphasia affects language comprehension and production due to cognitive deficits.

Slurred Speech and Dysarthria:

Slurred speech can be a symptom of various types of dysarthria, such as ataxic dysarthria, which is associated with cerebellar damage and impaired coordination.

Screening Test for Aphasia and Dysarthria:

The Dysphagia, Aphasia, and Stroke Screening (DASS) is a screening tool used to assess for aphasia and dysarthria after stroke.

Speech Pathologist Assessments:

Speech pathologists conduct comprehensive assessments for dysarthria, including:

- Physical examination of the speech mechanism
- Evaluation of articulation, prosody, and intelligibility
- Administration of standardized tests and observational assessments
