What hand signals do badminton officials use? If the racket handle is facing up when the shuttlecock is hit the service judge will lift up their open hand with palm facing out to indicate a fault due to the racket handle facing up. As well as the service judge there are also line judges for the back lines and side lines.

What is the hand signal for a service fault? A service order fault is committed when the service is not made according to the service order, the referee signals by making a circular motion with the forefinger.

What is undue delay of service in badminton? Neither side shall cause undue delay to the delivery of the service once the server and the receiver are ready for the service. On completion of the backward movement of the server's racket head, any delay in the start of the service (Law 9.2) shall be considered an undue delay.

Are your feet on the service line or off the ground? At all times during a service, a player's feet must always be within the lines of the court. If his/her leg touches the lines, it is called a fault. Also, while serving, a player's feet must be firmly planted on the ground.

What is the proper hand signal? If your vehicle signals don't work, use these hand signals: Left Turn: left arm extended straight out. Right Turn: left arm out and bent upwards. Stop: left arm extended out and bent downwards.

How do line judges communicate in badminton? Line judges are responsible for a particular line on the court during a match, and they determine if the shuttle has landed in or out with respect to that line. They communicate that information to the umpire through the appropriate hand signals and verbal call, where appropriate.
