Sun Yaoting: The Last Eunuch of China

Who was Sun Yaoting?

Sun Yaoting (1893-1996) was the last surviving eunuch in China. He was recruited into the Imperial Palace at the age of 8 and served as a personal attendant to Empress Dowager Cixi. After the Xinhai Revolution of 1911 ended the Qing dynasty, Sun lived in poverty and obscurity until the 1960s, when he was discovered by a historian.

What was life like for a eunuch in the Qing dynasty?

Eunuchs were castrated men who served as servants and attendants in the Imperial Palace. They were considered to be ritually impure and socially inferior, but they also enjoyed some privileges and status within the palace hierarchy. Sun Yaoting described his life as one of constant fear and humiliation, but he also expressed pride in his service to the empress dowager.

How did Sun Yaoting escape the palace?

After the empress dowager died in 1908, Sun Yaoting was allowed to leave the palace. He initially lived with his family, but he later became a monk. However, he faced discrimination and harassment wherever he went, and he struggled financially. In 1966, he was arrested during the Cultural Revolution and sent to a labor camp. He was released in 1972 and spent the rest of his life in poverty.

What were Sun Yaoting's contributions to history?

Sun Yaoting's firsthand account of life as a eunuch in the Qing dynasty provides a valuable glimpse into a hidden world. His memoirs, published in 1988, have been widely read and translated into multiple languages. He also served as a consultant for the 1987 film "The Last Emperor," which depicted the life of Puyi, the last Qing emperor.

What is Sun Yaoting's legacy?

Sun Yaoting's life is a reminder of the complexities of Chinese history and the enduring social stigma associated with being a eunuch. His story has been the subject of numerous books, films, and documentaries, and he continues to be a symbol of the suffering and resilience of the Chinese people.
