Writ of Garnishment in Aid of Writ of Attachment: Q&A

A writ of garnishment in aid of writ of attachment is a legal instrument used to seize assets from a third party, called a garnishee, who holds property or owes a debt to a defendant subject to a writ of attachment. This article provides a Q&A to clarify the key aspects of this procedure:

Q: What is the purpose of a writ of garnishment in aid of writ of attachment?

A: This writ allows the plaintiff to secure assets or funds that may be available to satisfy a judgment obtained against the defendant. It complements the writ of attachment, which aims to freeze the defendant's assets.

Q: Who can be a garnishee?

A: A garnishee can be any third party who holds property of or owes a debt to the defendant, such as a bank, employer, or tenant.

Q: What type of assets can be garnished?

A: Assets that can be garnished include wages, bank accounts, accounts receivable, and real estate. However, certain assets, such as Social Security benefits and unemployment compensation, are exempt from garnishment.

Q: How is a writ of garnishment in aid of writ of attachment served?

A: The writ is typically served by a sheriff or process server on the garnishee. The garnishee must then file an answer stating whether they are in possession of any property or are indebted to the defendant.

Q: What happens if the garnishee has assets or a debt owed to the defendant?

A: If the garnishee admits to having such assets or a debt, the court may order them to turn over the property or pay the debt to the plaintiff to satisfy the judgment. The garnishee may also file a motion to contest the garnishment.
