Solution Manual for Quantitative Analysis for Management, 10th Edition

Question 1:

Explain the difference between a population and a sample.

Answer:

A population is the entire collection of individuals or objects that are being studied. A sample is a subset of the population that is selected for study. The goal is for the sample to represent the population as accurately as possible.

Question 2:

Why is it important to use random sampling?

Answer:

Random sampling ensures that each member of the population has an equal chance of being selected for the sample. This helps avoid bias and improves the likelihood that the sample accurately represents the population.

Question 3:

What are the three main types of measurement scales?

Answer:

The three main types of measurement scales are:

- Nominal scale: Data is classified into distinct categories, but there is no inherent order to the categories.
- Ordinal scale: Data is ordered, but the distance between the categories is not meaningful.
- Interval scale: Data is ordered and the distance between the categories is meaningful, but there is no true zero point.

Question 4:

How do you calculate the mean, median, and mode of a data set?

Answer:

- Mean: Sum all the data values and divide by the number of values.
- Median: Find the middle value in an ordered data set.
- Mode: The most frequently occurring value in a data set.

Question 5:

What is the difference between correlation and causation?

Answer:

Correlation measures the relationship between two variables, indicating whether they tend to move together. Causation implies that one variable is responsible for causing a change in another variable. Correlation does not imply causation, and it is important to establish causality through experimentation or other methods.
