

CHAPTER 7 SECTION 2 GUIDED READING THE CHALLENGES OF URBANIZATION

Download Complete File

What are the challenges of urbanization answer? THE IMMEDIATE CHALLENGES OF URBAN LIFE. Congestion, pollution, crime, and disease were prevalent problems in all urban centers; city planners and inhabitants alike sought new solutions to the problems caused by rapid urban growth. Living conditions for most working-class urban dwellers were atrocious.

Why were immigrants drawn to cities in the Northwest and Midwest? Immigrants poured into the cities looking for work. Cities such as New York, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Milwaukee, and St. Louis attracted large number of immigrants eager to work in their factories.

Why were white farmers drawn to the cities? The growth of commerce drew thousands of farm children to the cities to work as bookkeepers, clerks, and salespeople. The expansion of factories demanded thousands of laborers, mechanics, teamsters, and operatives. The need of rural areas for services available only in urban centers also promoted the growth of cities.

Why were African Americans drawn to the cities? In addition to this “push” out of the South, African Americans were also “pulled” to the cities by factors that attracted them, including job opportunities, where they could earn a wage rather than be tied to a landlord, and the chance to vote (for men, at least), supposedly free from the threat of violence.

What were 3 problems caused by urbanization? But when poorly planned, urbanization can lead to congestion, higher crime rates, pollution, increased levels of inequality and social exclusion. Inequality within cities has economic, spatial and social dimensions.

Why is urbanization a challenge? Poor air and water quality, insufficient water availability, waste-disposal problems, and high energy consumption are exacerbated by the increasing population density and demands of urban environments. Strong city planning will be essential in managing these and other difficulties as the world's urban areas swell.

Why did many African Americans migrate to northern and midwestern cities? The driving force behind the mass movement was to escape racial violence, pursue economic and educational opportunities, and obtain freedom from the oppression of Jim Crow. The Great Migration is often broken into two phases, coinciding with the participation and effects of the United States in both World Wars.

Why did immigrants move to the north and urban areas during the 1800s? Many states, especially those with sparse populations, actively sought to attract immigrants by offering jobs or land for farming. Many immigrants wanted to move to communities established by previous settlers from their homelands. Once settled, immigrants looked for work.

How did immigrants impact urbanization? The end of the nineteenth century saw a period of rapid immigration and urbanization. As the promise of factory jobs and higher wages attracted more and more people into the cities, the United States began to shift to a nation of city dwellers. By 1900, 30 million people (30% of the population) lived in cities.

Why did people move to cities? Throughout history, people have been drawn to cities as centers of trade, culture, education, and economic opportunity, but the resulting urban population growth has not always been steady. Indeed, urbanization is a relatively recent phenomenon; until recent years, the vast majority of people lived in rural areas.

Why did farmers settle in cities? With such capitals, these farmers and their families were willing to settle in urban areas that could provide more job opportunities and better living conditions (Figure 3).

Why did many Americans move from rural to urban areas? As the promise of jobs and higher wages attracted more and more people into the cities, the U.S. began to shift to a nation of city dwellers. By 1900, 30 million people, or 30 percent of the total population, lived in cities.

Why did immigrants get drawn to cities in the northeast and Midwest?
IMMIGRANTS SETTLE IN CITIES Most of the immigrants who streamed into the United States in the late 19th century became city dwellers because cities were the cheapest and most convenient places to live. Cities also offered unskilled laborers steady jobs in mills and factories.

How did the Great Migration change northern cities? Cities like New York; Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; and Chicago, Illinois, saw their African American populations grow by 50 percent or more during this period. This population surge placed great pressure on the municipal services and housing supply of these cities.

What was the Great Migration for kids? In the United States, a large number of African Americans moved from the South to the North and West during the 20th century, particularly during World Wars I and II. This large-scale relocation is called the Great Migration. In 1900 the vast majority of African Americans lived in the Southern states.

What are urban challenges? Major challenges of urban growth include affordable housing, urban pollution, and inequalities in access to services and amenities. Urban sprawl is an issue for all growing urban areas. Developing countries have a higher formation of informal or squatter settlements.

What are the causes of urbanisation? The two causes of urbanisation are natural population increase and rural to urban migration. Urbanisation affects all sizes of settlements from small villages to towns to cities, leading up to the growth of mega-cities which have more than ten million people.

What were the three major problems brought about by urbanization?

Explanation: Urbanization, the process of a population shifting from rural areas to urban areas, brought about major problems including pollution, tenements, and traffic congestion.

How does urbanization affect the environment? Urban areas can grow from increases in human populations or from migration into urban areas. Urbanization often results in deforestation, habitat loss, and the extraction of freshwater from the environment, which can decrease biodiversity and alter species ranges and interactions.
