It involves the physical, economic, social, and cultural transformations that took place as a result of colonialism.

How do indigenous peoples critique colonialism?

They highlight the dispossession of land, resources, and culture, as well as the violence, discrimination, and oppression that indigenous peoples have faced. These critiques draw attention to the ongoing effects of colonial policies and practices, and advocate for indigenous rights, self-determination, and sovereignty.

What are some examples of indigenous critiques of colonialism?
