Text Document Character Segmentation Using MATLAB

What is Text Document Character Segmentation?

Text document character segmentation is the process of dividing a digital image of a text document into individual characters. It is a fundamental step in optical character recognition (OCR) systems and other document analysis applications.

How does MATLAB support Character Segmentation?

MATLAB provides several functions and toolboxes that support text document character segmentation. The Image Processing Toolbox, in particular, offers a range of image processing and analysis algorithms. For character segmentation, the imfindcircles function is commonly used to identify connected components in an image, which can then be further processed to extract individual characters.

What is the MATLAB Source Code for Character Segmentation?

Here is a sample MATLAB source code for text document character segmentation:

% Read the image
image = imread('text_document.jpg');

% Convert to grayscale
grayImage = rgb2gray(image);

% Threshold the image
threshold = graythresh(grayImage);
binaryImage = imbinarize(grayImage, threshold);

% Find connected components
[centers, radii] = imfindcircles(binaryImage, [20 40], 'Sensitivity', 0.9

% Crop the characters
segmentedCharacters = zeros(length(centers), 20, 20);
for i = 1:length(centers)
    segmentedCharacters(i, :, :) = imcrop(binaryImage, [centers(i, 1)-rad end

How to Use the Source Code

To use the provided source code, replace 'text_document.jpg' with the path to your input text document image. The code will output a matrix 'segmentedCharacters' containing segmented character images.

Benefits of Using MATLAB for Character Segmentation

MATLAB offers several advantages for text document character segmentation:

- Wide range of image processing algorithms
- Easy-to-use graphical user interface (GUI)
- Extensive documentation and support
