The Last Mughal: The Fall of Delhi in 1857

Q: Who was the last Mughal emperor? A: Bahadur Shah Zafar II, great-grandson of the founder of the Mughal Empire, Akbar the Great.

Q: What were the events leading up to the fall of Delhi? A: After the British East India Company's annexation of Awadh in 1856, the sepoys (Indian soldiers) in the British army became increasingly discontent. This discontent culminated in the Sepoy Mutiny, which began in Meerut on May 10, 1857. The rebels, who proclaimed Bahadur Shah Zafar II as their emperor, marched on Delhi and captured the city.

Q: What happened during the siege of Delhi? A: British forces laid siege to Delhi for over four months, facing fierce resistance from the rebel sepoys and the civilian population. The city was eventually captured by the British on September 20, 1857.

Q: What was the fate of Bahadur Shah Zafar II? A: After the fall of Delhi, Bahadur Shah Zafar II was captured by the British and exiled to Rangoon, Burma, where he died in 1862. His exile marked the end of the once-mighty Mughal Empire.

Q: What were the consequences of the fall of Delhi? A: The British reasserted their control over India, but the rebellion had a profound impact on British rule. The East India Company was dissolved, and the British government assumed direct control of India. The rebellion also led to increased distrust between the British and Indians, which would continue to shape Anglo-Indian relations for decades to come.
